After looking over these sketches the rooms seem spacious, orderly, and in character with the concept of the building. This ignores the desirability of having reading areas between the stacks, but I don't believe that it would seem "tight." As planned here I think the rooms would be light and restful and I am not sure that they could be successfully broken up (on the basis of the same number of books and the same structural scheme). After taking a longer look at this layout I think I prefer it to the later one, but that may be due to a poor memory. In any case I shall attend the meeting tomorrow afternoon.
