

About three weeks ago Mr Jones came to our community Council meeting and told us some of his plans for the year. One of the things he stressed most at that time was the need for making our community an integrated, unified body instead of a divided community. As we stood out of the committee dining room that day, I remember we voluntarily said each + everyone of us would do some thinking on the subject of how this integration plan could be best achieved. It is needless of me to say that I hope this was done. The other people I've asked to help us to-day are representatives from the various committees of the college. I hope that now, from this distinguished group, we shall get some brilliant ideas of how to proceed + make our hope of a unified community become a realization.