The Educational Policies Committee consist of seven members, one representative from each major and the chairman of the Community Council, ex-officio. The EPC member meets with the faculty of her major at the beginning of the spring semester and together they select four students as nominees for the next term of office. The list is then taken to the students in each major and either approved or changed. However, all students nominated must be approved by the faculty in the respective majors. The students then vote upon the approved list in preferential order. Each EPC member selects a sub-committee. These sub-committees vary in size from three members to six members, according to the size of the major. The subcommittees help the EPC members to carry on the surveys of classes and act as representatives of their various years. The previous EPC member is always a member of the sub-committee for the first semester of the new member's term.

2. Function

Legal - Supposedly the EPC acts as go-between faculty and students in regard to criticism, suggestion or comment, and represents student opinion on questions of educational policy.

Actual - The major occupation of the EPC is the execution of the semi-annual survey of classes and the communication of the results of the surveys to the members of the faculty.

The EPC members are supposed to attend faculty meetings when invited, but they rarely participate in such gatherings.

The EPC is usually delegated to consider invitations to participate in or attend conferences, debates or other "educational" activities and to advertise such occasions when they seem compatible with the Bennington program.

3. Relation with other groups

The only constant relationship with any other group is that with the Community Council, facilitated by the attendance of the Chairman at all EPC meetings. This serves as the only channel of communication between the two groups. The legal relationship of the EPC as a sub-committee of the Community Council has not been practiced, and the two have acted as entirely separate committees. As canvassers of student opinion, the EPC has occasionally passed on suggestions to the Meetings Committee, but this has been a spasmodic practice.
