President's Report

This past fiscal year has been marked by acts of individual generosity from those within the Bennington family unparalleled in the history of the College and a degree of support from institutions outside Bennington rare in magnitude. To acknowledge that giving in a way that accurately represents the extent of our appreciation is a formidable task, even in the context of a year which has reinvented the meaning of formidable.

The lists that compose much of this document provide the details, and they speak reams in themselves. But they do not convey the courage and the willingness to take extraordinary risks displayed by the people and organizations who chose to support the College at a time of dramatic change and controversy.

The compilation of individual donors is led by two truly remarkable $1 million gifts, one a powerful though anonymous challenge grant that leveraged another million from alumni, and the other from Judith Rosenberg Hoffberger '54. Ringing as this list is, I wish that there were some way to register the crossfire in which so many of these donors were caught or to measure the special conviction it took to give at this moment. Most of all, there simply is no way to measure the impact of this support, for large and important as its number value, the value of what it said to us at Bennington and to the world about the continuing strength of the College was infinitely greater.

That message was heard loud and clear by the foundations that were such an integral part of our success. When the Mellon Foundation in June of last year committed a half million dollars in support of the changes outlined in the Symposium

Report, foundation officers did so knowing full well that the outcome was anything but certain. They also knew their action would influence profoundly that outcome. Then came the others, in an outpouring of support. That list will swell over the coming years, but those who entered at this particularly high risk moment will hold a special place in the history and the heart of the College: the Christian A. Johnson Endeavor Foundation; the Davis Educational Foundation; the Pew Charitable Trusts; and the Starr, Culpeper, Hewlett Foundations, among others.

This year set a new record for us—$6.9 million in cash and pledges, the most we've ever raised. At the heart of this astonishing success is the power of ideas. They are, after all, what Bennington had to offer. This past year, in discussions with foundations, opportunities to speak to high-profile groups all over the country, and during panel discussions with other educators, I have heard time and again about higher education's diminution as the force it had once been and the tragedy of that loss. So many leaders are looking to Bennington to address and master the thorny issues before us with ideas on the cutting edge.

Ideas worthy of Bennington donors—individual and foundation, who gave so generously—were developed with the guidance of our Trustees, who accepted and fulfilled their trust in an institution deeply alive; were imbued with the passion of excellence and innovation; were innumerable and invigorating. I cannot begin to single them out here, but you must know that they were the beginning of a united effort that is making all of Bennington's potential real.

Each member of the staff went beyond what could reasonably be asked and unfailingly carried out administrative responsibilities with patience, good humor and distinction. I cannot help but note the efforts of my own staff, who did so much for me personally, with support from every sector of the campus.

Finally, and most importantly, there is the faculty who, in a time of unprecedented pressure and nonstop tension, accepted the Trustee invitation to recreate their own structures and governance and made the soul of this college thrill with educational energy and excitement.

All of these acts of generosity, and especially faith, bring us to a Fall that is laced with anticipation and the knowledge that we have built an educational experience for our students that is without compare and worthy of the name Bennington.

So with a sense of enormous confidence in the future of the College, much awe, and unadulterated joy in our accomplishment, I thank you.

Elizabeth Coleman
President

Board Report

The year 1994-95 at Bennington was remarkable by any standard, as the College began implementing the ideas generated by the 1994 Symposium. In terms of fund raising, which had to provide the foundation for a successful first year in the restructuring process, it was a time when need and faith were matched with generosity and vision.

At $5.06 million in cash gifts, Bennington set a new fundraising record during 1994-95, exceeding the previous record by almost one million dollars. The combined total raised during the year, including gifts and pledges for continuing contributions, was $6.9 million—not only a record, but also a beacon for the future of Bennington College.

Foundation giving was a very large part of that success, presenting clear evidence that Bennington is about the work that must be done to reform higher education. Commitments of more than $2.2 million from 11 foundations resulted in a best-ever year for foundation giving. And while fewer alumni contributed to the College during the year than in the previous year, those who gave did so in spectacular fashion: Total alumni giving exceeded the previous annual record by more than one million dollars, attributable in large measure to a two-year, one million dollar anonymous trustee challenge grant that was met a full year early.

One result of this extraordinary year of fund raising is that Bennington balanced its budget for 1994-95—an enormous accomplishment, given the restructuring transition costs and the fact that it followed a year when the College incurred a $1 million deficit. Another result, less tangible but even more significant, is that Bennington can look to its future with renewed vitality. For that gift of vision and generosity to Bennington College, we are indebted to the alumni, foundations, and friends who gave it. Thank you all.
