

Galley

The questionnaire about redecorating Commons has passed through all of our mailboxes with little or no comment, just the usual half-hearted Bennington response - apathy. Before anything more is done in this direction, there is a question that ought to be raised:

While there is a tight financial situation at Bennington, shouldn't money be allocated first to the most basic needs of the school such as new faculty members in some of the more crowded departments and educational facilities, before we worry about recreational frills? Granted, if the educational facilities aren't adequate, students may need a bowling alley and such - but give us a chance. Those things can come later.

The Commons questionnaire ended with a space for "other" suggestions. How about some response to this one?

R.N., T.H., and L.B.

[ca. SPRING 1967]