Everything in this show was created with old materials that would otherwise have been thrown away. I used fabric remnants, seconds, and old clothing to create clothing that can transition from one look to another. It's important to support the eco-friendly movement in the realm of fashion, and that includes getting as much function out of already existing things before throwing them away.

In the Spring of 2009, I will be debuting an exhibit of women's seventeenth century and eighteenth century clothing, exploring the cultural interplay of clothing and the female body. This will be an interactive exhibit, with live models and live narration. I am incredibly excited to be undertaking this project, and am thankful to Danny Michaelson and Carol Pal for their questions and guidance thus far.
