

Rave Review for Randich

OCTOBER 11, 2017

A review in the Hartford Courant of Jean Randich's "The Importance of Being Earnest" highly praised the Connecticut Rep production.

The review commends Randich, as she "has found a way to make "The Importance of Being Earnest" as funny as it should be while still touting Oscar Wilde's importance as a queer icon."

The review also praised the comedic effect of the play as a whole: "It's funny. Really funny. On opening night, the actors were still learning how long they had to wait for the laughter to subside before they could safely speak again. Sometimes they were waiting a very long time."

The play will run through October 18.
